Although the sky may be the limit in the out-of-doors, exterior designers like Ryan Hughes Design Build are often tasked with expanding the feel and function of outdoor spaces with limits. “The key to creating a larger feel and a sense of openness is found in executing a plan that stays away from the use of elevation changes or dark vertical features that can close off a design,” said Ryan Hughes. A selection of lighter colors in surfaces to fabrics or sleek and minimalistic textures in tiles to furnishings also can create a visually open feel to a design plan, indoors or out.
